

Canadian Studies Center

Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies
University of Washington

The Good and Bad of a Universal Health Care System: What the United States Can Learn from Canada

- As President Obama has positioned healthcare reform as a key component of his administration, a better understanding of universal health care is critical for U.S. citizens. Canada has had a universal system of health care at a reasonable cost for decades and can provide lessons for our country.
- As we look at reform of our health care system, should we use Canada's system as a model?
- What do Canadians think of their health care system?
- What does a universal health care system have to offer?

To get answers to these questions and more, you are invited to attend a lecture by University of Victoria's

Dr. Mary Ellen Purkis, May 11th, from 1:30 to 3:30 in Carwein Auditorium. Dr. Purkis is an associate professor in nursing and Dean of Human and Social Development.

This lecture is funded by a Program Enhancement Grant of the Canadian Studies Center, Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies