In December 2020, a unique project at the University of Washington's Canadian Studies Center was funded to build an international team of scholars and community leaders whose research and work focused on social services, supports and wellbeing in Arctic Canada (and beyond). While the primary goal was to develop a special issue for an academic journal, the project aimed to also build interdisciplinary relationships.

Panelists will share their experiences of being involved in the project and how this project has impacted them personally (insights achieved through their involvement) and professionally (how the project is meaningful and applicable to their own areas of research).
