Explores how images and ideas of power, violence, and global modernity circulate in memories and discourses about US relations with Vietnam, the Philippines, and Indonesia. Topics include foundational myths, colonial and postcolonial encounters, historiography and narrative, and nationalist and ethnic identity formations.

HSTAS 530/JSIS 580
Field Course in Southeast Asian History
5 cr
W  130-320
MEB 102
GIEBEL
This course is a theoretical and historiographical introduction to the field of modern Southeast Asian history. We will explore the ways in which the field has recently engaged questions of, inter alia, nationalism, colonialism, and modernity as the notion of “area studies” is being rethought. In our reading of six recent works focusing on specific Southeast Asian countries and/or regional knowledge production, we will analyze how each work fits into the field as a whole and how each work stretches the boundaries of both the discipline of history and the study of the Southeast Asia region. The course is structured on the assumption that students taking the class have some prior knowledge of the field or a specific part of it through coursework or study. Because this course is a research seminar, by the eighth week of the class, students are expected to have formulated a research topic for which they will have Spring quarter to produce a 25 page research paper to be presented next quarter in HSTAS 532, the second research seminar in this sequence. N.B. There may be exceptions to this model for undergraduates enrolled, with instructor permission, in the course.

Provides a historical understanding of the twentieth century and major global issues today. Focuses on interdisciplinary social science theories, methods, and information relating to global processes and on developing analytical and writing skills to engage complex questions of causation and effects of global events and forces.

There are two main themes of this course. The first is the making and un-making of global orders. Over the course of the last hundred years (or so), there have been numerous attempts to impose economic, political, military, and cultural frameworks in the name of various ideals like peace, security, democracy, and development. Many of those attempts have led to disastrous consequences. This course will explore many of those varying efforts and pay particular attention to the work that has gone into the connections and conflicts between “First” and “Third” World projects. The second theme concerns the interplay between structures and actors in various processes of international political economy. On both global and local levels, the old observation of Karl Marx remains largely true: people make their own history, but they do not make it under conditions of their own choosing. We will examine both how global forces structure the decisions of elite and popular sectors, as well as how political actors negotiate, contest, and transform global forces.
