POLITICAL ECONOMY OF CONTEMPORARY TURKEY

In this course, we will survey modern Turkish history with a particular focus on how political economic developments at the global level have interacted with local political and economic structures and institutions to yield concrete outcomes. To be more specific, we will look answers for the following questions: What explains the development of a strong state in Turkey that has dominated civil society? What are the historical and institutional factors behind the formation of a strong military establishment that has formed a solid alliance with the civilian state bureaucracy (especially with the judiciary)? What is the nature of Turkish secularism and can we actually call state-religion affairs in Turkey as 'secular'? How can we explain the recent rise to power of Islamic parties and the uncontested hegemony they have formed in the political arena and in economic governance? Why can't Turkey resolve the ethnic tensions (and war) with its Kurdish citizens in a peaceful manner? Finally, what accounts for the uneasy, and rather gloomy, coexistence of high economic growth with very high regional inequalities and very low human development scores?
