The course commences with the origins and spread of humans, from our most remote hominid ancestors to the present, and reviews the attempts by paleoanthropologists and archaeologists to understand our ancient ancestors. The course then addresses the ways in which humans worldwide make their livings, and how they arrange their societies. We conclude with a study of the ways in which family, language, and religion have influenced and continue to influence human behavior.

The course will trace the dramatic transformation of the pagan Roman empire to the Christian Byzantine Empire during the Late Antique and Early Christian periods through the artistic and visual culture of the time. Starting with the third century and ending with the beginning of the eighth c. A.D. it will focus primarily on the art of the State and the art of the Church as reflections and witnesses of the political, and religious factors that contributed dynamically to the modification of the institutional structure of the pagan Roman empire, and gave rise to its new identity, the Christian empire of Byzantium that came to represent a new ideal of statehood that prevailed for more than a millennium.

This course requires the words “in translation” in order to accommodate the many languages adopted by Jewish writers after 1880 – Yiddish, Hebrew, Russian, German.... But as I look to the content and not simply the language of these stories, I am inclined to replace the word “translation” with “transition,” for new writing in each of these languages would emerge from the alteration, the migration, and the Revolution that would transform traditional Jewish life in the shtetl and the ghetto of Eastern Europe before its obliteration in the early 1940s. This course will reveal the vitality of this multi-lingual Jewish culture before the Second World War. Our readings are entirely comprised of short fiction from the Yiddish of Sholom Aleichem and I.L. Peretz, the Hebrew of Dvora Baron, the Russian of Isaac Babel and the German of Franz Kafka and Joseph Roth.

While the exact scope of the course is still to be decided, it likely will range over 2000 years or so of Mongolia's history from the time of the Xiongnu (ca. 200 BCE) to the present. There will be significant emphasis on the period of the Mongol Empire and its immediate successors (13th-15th centuries). Which topics are covered will to some extent depend on how many students are registered for the class and which ones they select for their papers/reports. The course will enhance critical thinking and writing skills with a challenging array of readings and several essay assignments.

THE IRANIAN REVOLUTION IN 1906

As Iraq is going through a difficult process of drafting and implementing a new constitution, this course explores the emergence of constitutionalism in the Middle East during the 19th and early 20th centuries. The focus will be on the historical developments leading to the "constitutional revolution" and the first parliament in Iran 100 years ago in 1906. Which cultural and social transformations in the Middle East had led to the revolution in Iran? Why did Shiite clerics and religious dissidents, merchants and radical socialists join in common cause to impose a European-style constitution on the Qajar king of Iran? What did it mean to be "modern" in Qajar Iran, and is the concept of "modernity" meaningful in the context of 19th-century Middle East? And how have intellectual and political developments of the last 100 years shaped the way historians imagined and imagine the 19th-century Middle East? Asking these central questions, this colloquium takes a critical look at various interpretations of historical change in 19th-century Iran. We will analyze narratives by Iranian and Western historians from E.G. Browne's "The Persian Revolution" (published in 1910) to A. Najmabadi's "Women with mustaches and men without beards" (2005) and put them in their historiographic and cultural contexts.

CONFRONTING MODERNITY: ISLAM IN SOUTH ASIA

Confronting Modernity: Islam in South Asia This class focuses on the development of a Modern Islamic identity in South Asia (India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh) from the last days of the Mughal Empire to the current period. Two important themes include 1) understanding the development of South Asian Islam in relationship to global developments including colonialism, Islamic reform movements, and pan-Islamism during the modern period and, 2) tracing the continuities and changes of older South Asian Islamic traditions through the colonial period. This class will also emphasize historical methodology by focusing on how historical information is gathered, analyzed, and reproduced. Thus, as we examine the history of South Asia, we will also focus on the historiography that has shaped the ways in which historical narratives of South Asia are created, and more specifically how this has impacted the development of Islamic identities in South Asia.

Focusing on recent analysis of Muslim civil society and the Islamic public sphere, this course examines political Islam as a phenomenon produced at the intersection of universalistic and particularistic political cultures and in the spaces between political, religious, and social authority. The course first examines the terms of analysis that social scientists employ to discuss 'political Islam' and 'Islamic fundamentalism'.

Students will examine the relationship between different forms of authority in Muslim societies and categories of Islamic political movements. Second the course will examine how different publics produce moral judgments about political practices, focusing on anthropological case studies from South Asia, South East Asia, and the Middle East.

LAW AND POWER: GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

This course covers fascinating and controversial global issues relating to interactions between political power (e.g., governments, legislatures, and courts), on the one hand, and the rule of law on the other hand. We will address issues at the domestic level, the international level, and through comparative analysis.

Among the issues to be studied: theories of law and political power; how the concept and practices of 'rule of law' have developed from antiquity to modernity; how civil democratic supervision has developed and what are its boundaries; the nature of political corruption and how to fight it; how economics affects law and what the interactions are between economic globalization and the rule of law; the relationships between judges/justices and politicians; warfare and human rights; terrorism, counter-terrorism and human rights; how law may assist and how it may hinder efforts to gain social equality; etc.
