MAHADEVAN

This course studies popular Indian cinema through a transnational lens. We engage with this cinema's many encounters, influences and travels with cultures and locations beyond India. Bollywood has had tremendous appeal with South Asians residing abroad. It also has a long history of popularity and circulation in the former Soviet Union, Turkey, China, even Nigeria. It has a complex relationship to Hollywood and to U.S pop culture, provoking questions about piracy and globalization. Meanwhile, Indian cinema has also been influenced by Italian neo-realism, the Spaghetti Western, 1980s Disco music, and the radical cinematic manifestos of Latin America. This course will take up a series of examples that crystallize Indian cinema's relation to the cultural universe beyond India and ask: how is Indian cinema, Indian?

Film and the Photographic Imaginary

MGH 097

5 cr

MAHADEVAN

This cross-disciplinary seminar introduces students to the theories, histories and creative practices that link film and photography. To what extent has the photographic imaginary influenced portraiture, reenactments, or the tableau in the cinema? In what instances have the overlaps between film and photography informed visual ethnography? Is the opposition between stillness and movement obsolete in the digital era? What other ontologies of the moving and still image can be found in non-Western contexts? Readings will be drawn from three areas: historical studies of the two media, film and photography theory, and the ethics and the politics of representation. Among others, we will read Marta Braun, Serge Gruzinsky, Seigfried

Kracauer, Catherine Russell, and WJT Mitchell. We will watch films by Atom Egoyan, Agnes Varda, Michelangelo Antonioni, Errol Morris, among others, as well as artists working across film and photography.
