EDUCATION

The education system in Georgia has experienced numerous reforms over the past two decades and has suffered from conflicts, natural disasters and insufficient investment. According to a UNICEF report, the quality of education has been deteriorating and a large portion of students rely on private tutoring to compensate and prepare them for higher education. Georgia currently has a compulsory nine-grade education system for ages 6-14 at which point students can pass exams and complete their studies, or continue for three more years at the secondary level to be eligible for university. Grading is on a 5-point scale (5=excellent, 4=good, 3=acceptable, 2=unacceptable). The literacy rate for 15 and over is 99.7%. Traditionally, greater emphasis has been placed on rote-learning rather than inquiry-based or critical thinking and exams are typically oral.

RELIGION

The official religion of Georgia is Georgian Orthodox. Georgia was the second country in the world to declare Christianity as a state religion in 337 (following Armenia in 334). The patriarch of Georgia is a politically powerful position and one of the most trusted public figures. The church plays an active yet at times controversial role in society.

ETHNICITY

Georgian can imply a nationality, ethnicity or language, and not all citizens are ethnic Georgians. While ethnic Georgians make up 84% of the population, there are also ethnic Azeris (7%), Armenians (6%), Russians (1.5%) and other smaller groups. Other ethnic groups such as Abkhaz and Ossetians live predominantly in the breakaway territories of Abkhazia and South Ossetia.

FAMILY, RELATIONSHIPS & CUSTOMS

Due to tradition as well as social and economic factors, Georgian youth tend to live with their parents through their education and after marriage. Grandparents often play a significant role in the upbringing of grandchildren. Georgian society holds strong to its traditions and has maintained a strong identity, culture, and language despite being a small nation overrun by larger empires over the centuries. Throughout the Soviet Union, Georgians were known for their food, wine, and supras. The supra is a feast of 3 or more with a toastmaster (tamada) who leads the feast with toasts that often include tales and lessons about friendship, history, family, and sweet memories. Some major holidays include: Orthodox Christmas (January 7 according to the Julian calendar), Women’s Day (March 8), Orthodox Easter, Giorgoba (April 24 and November 24), Mariamoba (August 28), and Independence (May 23).
CONTEMPORARY GEORGIA

Located in a strategic and desirable location between the Black and Caspian Seas, Georgia has been divided and conquered repeatedly throughout history. In 337 AD it was the second country to declare Christianity as a state religion. Georgia experienced a Golden era from 1184 to 1213 under Queen Tamar. At the turn of the 19th century, Georgia was incorporated into the Russian Empire under Catherine the Great. It gained independence after the Russian Revolution, only to be annexed by the Soviets in 1921.

One of Georgia’s most famous and controversial sons, Joseph Jugashvili (Stalin), rose through the Bolshevik ranks to become the leader of the Soviet Union. His role in history remains a contested issue, with Georgians torn between pride and horror. Stalin was not kind to his motherland and Georgians suffered considerably under his rule. During the Soviet period, Georgia was a favorite vacation destination for leaders citizens who were fond of its towering mountains and subtropical coast, food, wine, and vibrant culture.

With the disintegration of the USSR in 1991, multiple conflicts erupted throughout the country. More than 300,000 Georgians were displaced and to this day have not returned to their homes. Eduard Shevardnadze, Soviet foreign minister until Gorbachev, returned to his homeland in 1992, and served as president until 2003 when he was ousted after accusations of vote rigging led to weeks of massive street protests known as the Rose Revolution. The results were annulled and his protégé, Mikheil Saakashvili, a leader of the protests, won the revote. In 2008, Georgia fought a brief five-day war with Russia resulting in permanent Russian occupation of the Georgian regions of Abkhazia and South Ossetia. Georgian-Russian relations remain strained to this day and the country’s western orientation is a point of contention with Moscow, which sees Georgia as belonging within its sphere of influence. The ongoing Russian military occupation of 20% of Georgia’s territory has only increased Georgia’s determination to join NATO. While US president George Bush showed enthusiasm for Georgian membership, Georgian efforts to join NATO have, so far, been frustrated. Georgians looked on in exasperation as Montenegro was accepted into NATO, despite Georgia having over 800 troops in Afghanistan to Montenegro’s 14. In July 2016, the US and Georgia signed an agreement which expanded military cooperation, and US Secretary of State John Kerry reaffirmed that eventually Georgia “will become a member of NATO.”

GEORGIAN IN THE USA

The first known immigrants to the US were Georgian horsemen including a troupe that arrived in 1890 and was hired by Buffalo Bill Cody. Additional waves of mostly nobility and intellectuals arrived following the Russian Revolution and Soviet invasion of Georgia. Emigration halted during the Soviet period, but resumed after 1991 when an estimated 1/5 of the population left. Georgian populations are found mostly in New York and San Francisco.
