ENVIRONMENTAL POLITICS AND JUSTICE IN THE ANTHROPOCENE

This course will use a range of anthropological, specifically ethnographic, texts and films to examine the complicated relationship between environmental politics and environmental justice across the world. Specifically, students in the class will critically engage with contemporary environmental movements in India, Bangladesh, the United States, Guatemala, Ecuador, Brazil, China, Ghana, and South Africa (among other places) to reflect on the ways in which environmental politics can simultaneously advocate for and conflict with claims to social and environmental justice. We will focus on a range of themes, including the bestowal of legal rights on “Nature” in recent years; right-wing environmentalism in the global south; ecofeminism and feminist ecologies; and religious environmentalism. No pre-requisites required. Please feel free to email the instructor (rgovind@uw.edu) for an add code.
