PIEDALUE

Questions how women are affected by economic development in Third World and celebrates redefinitions of what development means. Theoretical perspectives and methods to interrogate gender and development policies introduced. Current processes of globalization and potential for changing gender and economic inequalities assessed. This course is located at the crossroads of two fields: feminism and development studies. It is organized in five units. The first unit will provide an introduction to the main concepts of the course. Regional trends in gender and economic development and the measurement of development and its effects on women will be the topics of critical discussion. We will also compare "reality" with "representation" of "Third World" women. The second unit of the course is on theories of gender and development. The theoretical and ideological underpinnings of different theories of development will be discussed. In the third unit the connections between patriarchy, the state, and development will be mapped looking at specific policies and programs. The roles of the state, NGOs, feminist and women's groups in designing, shaping and implementing policies and programs will be explored in the context of (i) the food crisis and poverty and (ii) health, population and reproductive rights. The fourth unit is on gender and development in the context of globalization and Structural Adjustment Policies. The focus of this unit is current processes of economic re-structuring in both the "Third World" and here in the U.S. The fifth unit is on cartographies of "development"; it focuses on grassroots conceptions of development and those of policy planners using gender-sensitive policy frameworks.

The course aims to provide an overview of the various ways cultures, community activisms, and development policies shape the way people interact with environmental resources in the biodiversity rich land of India. India is a region of environmental extremes, ranging from the highest mountain ranges in the world to deep oceans, dense tropical forests to arid deserts. The ecological wealth that India possess in terms of many medicinal plants, endangered animals and endemic species makes the country one of the most biodiversity rich countries in the world. At the same time India's engagement with long periods of colonialism, various phases of economic policies and the globalized world economy fundamentally shaped the way different social groups in India has come to interact with their local environments. The course then makes us aware that our ways of interacting with environment can be intricately shaped by both existing social inequalities and by various global influences ranging from neo-liberalism to climate change. The various topics covered in the course range from folk traditions of environmentalism, traditional environmental knowledge systems, community-based environmental movements, and sustainable development practices to questions of climate justice.

Colonial Encounters

5 cr

TTh 930-1120

SAV 139

BAILKIN

From Columbus' voyages to the New World in the late fifteenth century to the era of decolonization in the 1960s, Europeans and the peoples they colonized were engaged in a vast project – often an extremely violent one – of trying and failing to make sense of one another. This course offers an opportunity to study the history of encounters between Europe and its colonies in a variety of geographical contexts. We will focus on a comparative analysis of British and French colonial encounters from the mid-eighteenth century to the twentieth, but will refer to Spanish, Dutch, and German colonial histories as well as to earlier incarnations of colonial encounters. The course will proceed chronologically and thematically, considering the impact of colonial science, law, sexuality, education, and economy on European identity and politics and, more broadly, on the trajectory of global history. Readings will include works by Oloudah Equiano, Charles Darwin, George Orwell, Frantz Fanon, and M.K. Gandhi; films will include Pontecorvo's Battle of Algiers, Ousmane Sembene's La Noire/Black Girl, and Matthieu Kassovitz's La Haine/Hate.

Provides a historical understanding of the twentieth century and major global issues today. Focuses on interdisciplinary social science theories, methods, and information relating to global processes and on developing analytical and writing skills to engage complex questions of causation and effects of global events and forces.

There are two main themes of this course. The first is the making and un-making of global orders. Over the course of the last hundred years (or so), there have been numerous attempts to impose economic, political, military, and cultural frameworks in the name of various ideals like peace, security, democracy, and development. Many of those attempts have led to disastrous consequences. This course will explore many of those varying efforts and pay particular attention to the work that has gone into the connections and conflicts between "First" and "Third" World projects. The second theme concerns the interplay between structures and actors in various processes of international political economy. On both global and local levels, the old observation of Karl Marx remains largely true: people make their own history, but they do not make it under conditions of their own choosing. We will examine both how global forces structure the decisions of elite and popular sectors, as well as how political actors negotiate, contest, and transform global forces.

This seminar will expose graduate students from across the University to a selection of key works across the social sciences and critical humanities in the general areas of "religions, cultures, and civilizations" or RCC. The RCC field engages the diversity of cultural and religious life throughout the world, anchored by concrete studies of world areas, histories, cultural and political movements, and religious institutions and practices. This field exposes students to theoretical and international debates about religions, cultures, and power. Through a survey of the major concepts, theories, and controversies in these debates, the seminar will help both masters and doctoral students gain a solid appreciation of the fundamental approaches to RCC-related works. This syllabus is the work of a collective of faculty who serve the Religions, Cultures, and Civilizations (RCC) field of the JSIS PhD Program, though each iteration is unique to the instructor's interests. This seminar is open to any interested graduate student at the University of Washington. 20% South Asia content, or 50% if students choose to do a final paper on South Asia.

This course studies the modern Hindi-Urdu theatrical tradition that has developed in North India since the mid-nineteenth century. We trace its evolution from a strong reformist phase during the colonial period to fully-fledged "National Theatres," expressing the aspirations of the independent nation-states of India and Pakistan, both trying to come to terms with their shared past. We also study how it continues to exert significant influence on the popular movies best known as Bollywood, which form such an important part of contemporary popular culture of South Asia. We will read drama scripts in the original Hindi/Urdu and watch theatrical performances, combined with study of the theoretical underpinnings as developed in secondary literature. Evaluation: classwork, mid-term creative project, and final project with paper.
Prerequisite: advanced Hindi/Urdu or instructor permit.
