People and Cultures of the Islamic Middle East

This course approaches the Middle East and North Africa from an anthropological perspective in order to understand the cultural differences and similarities that bind the west to that region historically, religiously, socially, and politically. The course will examine and challenge commonly held stereotypes through discussion of such topics as the practice and beliefs of Islam, settlement patterns and nomadism, male and female roles, and ethnic identity and conflicts.

The course is intended to provide the student with a general comprehensive background on the peoples and cultures of the Middle East and North Africa, while leaving room for students to explore specific topics of interest. Since it is expected that graduate students will have a greater need for independent research on their own topics, requirements are somewhat different for graduates and undergraduates.

Texts: Dale Eickelman, The Middle East: An Anthropological Approach; Clifford Gertz, Islam Observed; Lila Abu Lughod, Veiled Sentiments; Donna Bowen and Evelyn Early, Everyday Life in the Muslim Middle East; Michael Gorkin, Days of Honey, Days of Onion: The Story of a Palestinian Family in Israel.

Grading:

- Class participation and map quiz (all students) 10%
- Midterm (all students) 30%
- Paper and class presentation

Undergraduates 10 pages 30%

Graduates 25-30 pages 60%

Readings In Ottoman Lit In A Post-Modern World (In English)

Since its inception the Republic of turkey has had a complex and troubled relationship with its Ottoman past. Issues of how that past will be understood and represented permeate all areas of Turkish culture from literature to art, architecture, religion, and political ideology. By examining these areas through the lens of recent critical theory, the course will touch on topics such as cultural identity, history and memory, repression, reaction, and rewriting. Readings will include a wide range of essays and excerpts from the work of theorists as well as Turkish writers. Students will be encouraged to bring their own interests and expertise to bear on the general topic. Fluency in Turkish will not be required.

ARCH 498/SIS 490A Geometry and Islamic Architecture (variable credits up to 5)

Mamoun Sakkal

(We don't have SLN or times yet)

Course Description: Islamic architecture has a unique contribution to make to our modern day search for more human-oriented design. This course will explore some of the techniques used in traditional Islamic architecture to create places which are responsive to the spiritual and aesthetic needs of their inhabitants.

This course will deal with two-dimensional and three-dimensional uses of symmetry, geometry, pattern, and proportion systems. We will also examine specific architectural features such as the use of calligraphy, muqarnas, star ribbed domes, and surface decorations in Islamic buildings.

Find out about: The culture, art, and architecture of the Middle East and Islamic world. Differences and influences of East/West, modern/traditional forces in architecture. Geometry as a form generating tool in architecture and decoration. Computers role in preserving traditional methods of design and building.

Pursue individual projects in the area of your interest.

NEAR E 496 B/NEAR E 596 B/ (OFFERED JOINTLY)

SPECIAL STUDIES: COMPARATIVE ISLAMIC STUDIES

(SLN: 9202/9203), 5 Credits

Course Description:* Faculty & students from more than a dozen departments and programs will be meeting in a year-long seminar focused on the extraordinary resources for the comparative study of Islam at the UW. Throughout the year, the seminar will host guest lectures from prominent international scholars from across North America and the Middle East to Africa and Southeast Asia.

The seminar is open to graduate students and select undergraduates in all disciplines. Students are not required to take all three quarters, nor is any quarter prerequisite for another. Each quarter, a small team of faculty supervises student progress, though more than two dozen UW faculty members are involved in the Comparative Islamic Studies program.

Each of the three quarters has a different focus. The Fall Quarter seminar is a "pro-seminar" designed to expose students to a variety of approaches and resources available for the comparative study of Islam. Each week, a different faculty member will introduce students to diverse disciplinary fields, information and funding resources, and other research strategies in the field.

Interested graduate students should contact Professor Brannon Wheeler at wheelerb@u.washington.edu or NELC at 543-6033
